ABOUT JORDAN

Jordan is a small country, but it consists of different geographical areas with special features. The country's terrain provides a range of landscapes and climates. Its diversity of habitats of desert, steppe oasis, and forest provide for the existence of varieties of flora and fauna. There in the Eastern Desert, which is a part of the Levant Desert and consists of most of the Jordan area. There are steep valleys near Wadi al-Mujib, high mountains of al-Sharah in the south, and the Jordan River in the west, which flows to the lowest point on earth.

The total area of Jordan is about 89,297 km². Jordan, at the heart of the Middle Eastern crossroads, is bound by the Great Syrian-African Rift with its unique fertile areas near Irbid, Jordan Valley and the Red Sea, and shares its borders from the north with Syria, from the east with Iraq and from the south with Saudi Arabia. To the west lie the Israeli-occupied West Bank, Palestinian National Authority, and Israel.

The Kingdom is divided into three natural regions. The first consists of the eastern depression of the Jordan Valley from the southern end of the Sea of Galilee in the north along the Jordan River, and the Dead Sea (the lowest point on earth) down to the Red Sea of Aqaba. The second natural region is the upland area above the Jordan Valley, which starts at the Yarmouk River in the north, stretching down to Aqaba. The desert to the east of these uplands is the third and largest region forming about 75 % of the total area.

Natural life is varied in the different regions. The Badia (pasture area), or the vast golden desert area, is inhabited by highly adapted creatures and wide varieties of mammals, birds and reptiles. The valleys have spring flowers and magnificent marine life and also wild animals, while in the oasis, migratory birds' rest.

CLIMATE:

Jordan is blessed with a Mediterranean climate for pleasurable year-round travel. Amman (annual rainfall is about 400 mm) is sunny and cloudless from May to October. Winter season, from November through March, generally mild but cold in high areas; spells of rain are interspersed with brilliant sunshine. Aqaba and the Jordan Valley (Dead Sea area) are ideal winter resorts with temperatures averaging 16-22°C (61-72 F) between November and April. Rainfall is nearly nonexistent in these areas and in the desert.

ECONOMY & CURRENCY

Jordan has limited natural resources, a small domestic production base, and is strongly service oriented. The exchange and trade system is relatively open and production and pricing policies are mostly market oriented. Agricultural products include olive, citrus, apple, and other fruit trees and vegetables.

Fertilizers, cement, and petroleum products are the principal output of the manufacturing sector. However, there are large numbers of medium-size companies that produce chemicals, foods, textiles, footwear, and furniture.. Jordan's main exports are mineral-related products including phosphate rock, potash, fertilizers, fruits and vegetables, and recently, pharmaceuticals.

The official Jordan currency is the Dinar (JD). It is divided into 100 piasters . Notes are 1,5,10,20 and 50 JD. Coins are 0.5, 1, 2.5, 10, 25, 50, and 100 piasters. The value of the Jordan Dinar (JD) fluctuates slightly in line with other international currencies. It generally maintains around 1.5 US $ to a Dinar. Traveler's checks can be converted easily at all banks, many changing offices and hotels. Credit Cards are widely accepted everywhere in Jordan.

POLITICAL SYSTEM:

There are three components of the executive branch: the monarch, the cabinet, and the local government. The king is the direct chief executive and his authority is exercised through the prime ministers of the cabinets. The prime ministers (appointed by the king) and the ministers (nominated by the prime minister) are subject to approval by the lower house of parliament. The king must authorize laws before they are passed.

The first constitution was drawn up in 1928 supervised by King Abdulla I. The constitution specifies that Jordan has a hereditary monarchy with a parliament system. It guarantees Jordanian citizens the following rights: freedom of speech, press, association, religion, and freedom to an elected parliament and municipal representatives. It also ensures the academic freedom and the existence of political parties.
